

Even oil deals can end up deadly.

Carl Dekker and his partner Hans Peter Hallmayer have now switched alliances and are under the protection of the CIA. But it doesn't come without a price. They are obligated to act as straw men whenever the CIA needs them to.

Their new case takes place in Nigeria, a hotspot of criminal activity and piracy, where the mafia is aspiring to open new markets for money laundering. And the way they plan to accomplish this is with the Nigerian spot market oil company Bonny Light Oil. Since spot market oil deals can cause a person to lose a great deal of money, it's something best left to the professionals—and just the right job for the CIA who allow their new decoys Dekker and Hallmayer a free hand in the transaction.

The mafia takes the bait and loses millions. On top of all this, the CIA initiates a Russian-Italian mafia war.

Everything seems to be running according to plan, but somewhere there is a leak. The mafia suddenly has knowledge of the next steps. The CIA must be harboring a spy.

Hans Joachim Palm was born in 1946 near Düsseldorf, Germany as the son of a textile manufacturer and has earned a degree in business. He now lives in the U.S. as an American citizen and has begun writing crime novels. His long-time, in-depth knowledge and experience stems from establishing his own international financial firms around the world where he came into contact with members of the mafia. His books are a reflection of his personal experience of working in international finance and his co-operation with the CIA.
